One of those sentences is compound, and one of them is complex. Diagramming complex sentences helps us to understand the function of subordinating conjunctions. I gave my regular ESL class yesterday, and I knew how to answer a question about dependent clauses and another about participles being used as adjectives. This means that the clauses in a complex sentence are not structurally equal. If two clauses are connected with a coordinating conjunction, it's a compound sentence. Subordinate Clause --> when I made dinnerÅ Subordinating Conjunction --> when Subordinating Conjunctions Subordinating conjunctions connect certain types of subordinate clauses to independent clauses, and they actually subordinate - or demote - the clause that they are introducing. (Think FANBOYS.)When we diagram compound sentences, we can really see the relationship between the clauses. Have you ever wondered how to tell the difference between complex sentences and compound sentences?Å ÅI struggled with this concept when I was learning grammar, and I know that you might be struggling with it as well.Å But first, let me describe the issue so that we're all on the same page! Take a look at these two sentences. This pretty much sums it up: Blah blah blah CONNECTING WORD blah blah blah. Here's an example. It's less work than trying to memorize the subordinating conjunctions as well. First, let's review what compound and complex sentences are. If two clauses are connected with a subordinating conjunction, it's a complex sentence. We can see that the clauses have equal structural importance. Compound Sentences Independent clauses are groups of words that have a subject and a verb, and can stand alone as complete thoughts. Here are a few examples for you: after, because, if, since, when, while. Should I tell my students that a sentence's structure can be determined based on the type of conjunction it has? Tip: If Simply memorize the seven conjunctions of coordination, it will easily know if the conjunction is coordination or subordination. You can see that the subordinating conjunct is connected to the subordinate clause. Students are able to choose the clauses (elegantly represented by blah, blah, blah in the previous example), but have trouble finding out if the prayer is composed or complex. It is connecting the clauses and is subordinating the dependent clause. They are for, and, nor, but, or, even, so. The clauses express related thoughts, but a clause act as a foundation of the sentence. It could help you think of these conjunctions as "subordinated". Not only do they connect clauses, but also subordinate that they are introducing! There are many, many subordinate conjunctions, so memorizing them would be a giant task. Complex sentences å å "> my mom smiled when I made dinner. I, independent clause å å "> my mom smiled. Read more about the subordinating conjunctions here. Read more about complex prayers here. Watch this. As you will see below, the dependent clause actually modifies part of the independent clause. Look at the subordinate clause when I made dinner. Summary When you are learning grammatic, it is easy for complex and composite prayers to look like the same. same.
